

From medicine to sustainability, UC Davis Health is all about healthy partnerships

For more than 15 years, we've partnered with UC Davis Health to achieve significant carbon reductions in their facilities. The latest example is right here in our own community with the recent opening of the brand new, all-electric Folsom Medical Care Center. Through our Integrated Design Solutions program, we partnered early on in the project to optimize budget and energy efficiency measures. This program helps businesses reduce carbon emissions by adding electrification and energy efficiency into their commercial building projects. The 114,000 square-foot center runs entirely on electricity, eliminating the use of natural gas or fossil fuels.

Going all-electric improves air quality and supports healthier communities. The medical center is a great example of taking sustainability and community health to new heights.

"UC Davis Health and SMUD are community anchors, prioritizing resiliency through responsible and clean energy management. This partnership demonstrates leadership that other businesses and their community utility providers can replicate, showcasing that with the right strategic planning, sustainability and community well-being go hand in hand."
